NEHRU-STALIN EXCHANGE STIRS UP DIPLOMACY

Moscow, July 18.

The diplomatic colony in Moscow was today showing the keenest interest in the communications on Korea between Marshal Stalin and the Indian Prime Minister, Pandit Nehru, seen here as a running parallel to the conversations of the British Ambassador, Sir David Kelly, and the Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister, M. Andrei Gromyko.

Marshal Stalin has told Mr. Nehru that he would support Security Council mediation in the Korean war so long as a Communist delegate represented China on the Council.

Marshal Stalin's reply, diplomats here thought, showed that the Soviet Government preferred to negotiate a peaceful settlement of the Korean problem within the framework of the United Nations Security Council rather than outside the Council through unofficial contact between the Soviet Union, the United States and China—the alternative suggestion that Mr. Nehru made.

The Kelly-Gromyko conversations have now been going on for more than a fortnight. Their content has not been disclosed, but they are believed to have been exploring the possibility of a peaceful settlement of the Korean problem.

Throughout the discussion Sir David Kelly has kept conferring with the American and French Ambassadors and has kept the Indian Ambassador fully informed of developments.

END DEADLOCK

Both Britain and India, having recognized Communist China, were seen here as interested in having Peking represented on the Security Council, thus ending the United Nations deadlock.

Naval Sabotage Suspected

London, July 18.
The Admiralty announced tonight that "unexpected mechanical troubles" had occurred in the 1,700-ton destroyer Cavendish at Rosyth, Scotland, and "possibilities of sabotage could not be ruled out."

Let Us Have Action

THE scant attention afforded to Hongkong problems during the Parliamentary debate on colonial affairs last week is probably to be regarded as a compliment to ability to look after ourselves. Mr. Lennox Boyd, one of the few members to deign a glance, ventured the reflection that Hongkong stands as the one area of order and security along the China coast and rejoiced that trade, the university and our connection with the Mother Country are all alike flourishing. Presumably that feeling, that this Colony, internally, has little to worry about, diverted minds to issues like groundnuts and the difficulties experienced in finding 1,000 suitable candidates willing to enter the Colonial Service. One interesting disclosure was, however, made by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr. James Griffiths. Referring to the steady advances made in the Colonies in the political and constitutional field, Mr. Griffiths revealed that since the arrival in England of the Governor, Sir Alexander Grantham, he had taken the opportunity to discuss with him the recommendations for constitutional reform in Hongkong, with the result that the matter is now being given further thought. Whether that implied the likelihood of further hesitation, a new adaptation, or the intention of going swiftly ahead could not be detected in the manner of expression, unless any conclusion can safely be drawn from the statement that Mr. Creech-Jones had the proposals under close consideration at the time of the General Election. We can live in hopes; we have been waiting long enough. Mr. Griffiths was taking pride in the Labour Government's achievements in other Colonies; the Gold Coast, enlargement of the Legislative Council with most members elected, Nigeria, representative regional legislatures and a Council of Ministers to be mainly Nigerians; the West Indies federation scheme; Trinidad, general election in September to give the first unofficial majority in Council; Gibraltar, an elected majority for a legislature to be convened in the autumn; Uganda, a boost of six unofficials in the Chamber. With so much already accomplished elsewhere, those who believe that local citizens should participate effectively and fully in shaping policy and controlling affairs, and that the Legislative Council should have more members elected directly or indirectly, will reiterate their grievance that a promise made five years ago has still to be implemented. Some of the reasons are partially appreciated. Franchise complications are difficult to overcome; some variations could be the reverse of beneficial. Twice, if not three times, the basic recommendations have been radically changed, after long committee sessions or consultation with leading personalities. Fears have been entertained that the Colony could too easily go too far and too fast. It might be harmful to a community with little background of experience or the advantage of tradition. Indeed, it can only be apprehensions along those lines, operative among the legal and political experts of the Colonial Office, which adequately explains the delay, seemingly interminable, in reaching decisions on the amended scheme approved by Hongkong's Legislative Council many moons ago. But let us have action. Modifications in franchise proposals would be readily accepted, provided the practical result, an unofficial majority, was not jeopardised. The system can be improved upon when circumstances dictate the appropriate answer tested by experience.

BRITAIN STIRRED BY NEW DEVELOPMENTS

Strachey Under Bombardment

London, July 18.
The War Minister, Mr. John Strachey, was bombarded by Conservatives in the House of Commons about the state of Britain's defence.

He declined, however, to give any information on preparations to deal with guided missiles and declined to discuss any short term measures.

When it was suggested that the Home Guard volunteer force should be re-formed he did not reply.

The Minister of Labour, Mr. George Lansbury, said that arrangements for the call up of forces were constantly under review and were ready for any emergency.—Reuter.

KOREA REDS AT A STANDSTILL OUTSIDE TAEJON

American Patrols Probe Line For Weak Spots

COSTLY KUM RIVER SMASH

Tokyo, July 19.

Small American forces pushed against Communist positions on the Taejon front on Tuesday feeling for weak spots which might be exploited.

Major Gen. William Dean's 24th Division had men out exploring weaknesses in positions of the battered North Korean forces whose offensive halted at the gates of Taejon. The Americans had to go hunting for the Communists who failed to follow through on their smash through the Kum River line.

Headquarters sources said the Taejon front had been "depressurised." They suggested the enemy was unable to exploit the costly victory of the Kum river because of attrition, or possibly because of "loss of the will to fight."

General MacArthur issued no communiqué because there was no change in the front situation. American and South Korean forces are dug in in new defence positions west and north of Taejon after falling back from the Kum river in another well-fought delaying action.

The most optimistic representation of the situation was that the turning point had been reached. Other sources were more guarded in their evaluation, but it was apparent that someone had thrown guard into the jaws of the North Korean military machine.

NO FOLLOW UP

Military sources point out that the North Koreans failed to follow the standard military axiom—When you have the enemy in retreat, keep relentless pressure on him, never give him a chance to catch his breath and reorganize.

Possibly there are several explanations for this. Firstly, the Air Force's pounding of supply sources and communications is finally catching up with the Reds, and they are running out of supplies at the front. Secondly, their fighting forces are so badly mauled that the high command had to order a halt for reorganization. Thirdly (and hopefully), the North Korean cannon fodder lost the will to fight. Regardless of the interpretation, the fact remains that the Reds are halted, giving the Americans more valuable time for preparing the counter-offensive.

AIR SORTIES

United Press correspondent Gene Symonds reports a considerable buildup of Red tanks and artillery north of the Kum, apparently due to inability to move it across the river under air attack. The Air Force flew 128 sorties from Japan yesterday, destroying four tanks, 32 trucks, (Contd. on page 5, Col. 1)

Ban On Women Lifted

New York, July 18.
General Douglas MacArthur has lifted the ban on women correspondents on the Korean front. In a cable to the New York Herald Tribune, he said, "The ban on women correspondents has been lifted. Miss Margaret Higgins (ordered out on Monday night) is held in the highest professional esteem by everyone."—United Press.

U.S. Rejects Mr. Nehru's Proposals

Washington, July 18.
The United States has rejected India's proposal for a Soviet-American deal to end the Korean war.

The text of the American reply was not made public immediately, but authoritative sources said it rejected suggestions that the United States help seat Communist China on the United Nations Security Council in return for a ceasefire in Korea.

Mr. Nehru suggested to Stalin and Mr. Dean Acheson, that the Korean conflict might be settled through seating Communist China on the Security Council in place of Nationalist China, as Russia has demanded. Stalin welcomed the intervention but the American position is that it can make no "deal" that links the Korean war to the issue of seating Red China. The American reply assures Mr. Nehru that the United States wants a peaceful solution of the Korean dispute, but the North Koreans must cease fire and withdraw to the 38th Parallel.—United Press.

More Rumour Of UK Troops Going To Korea From Hongkong

London, July 18.

Speculation abounds on the possibility of sending British troops to Korea from Hongkong and Malaya.

A War Office spokesman in London today refused to support a suggestion made by high military quarters in Singapore that British troops would be sent to Korea from Singapore and Hongkong.

Anti-Red Editor Shot

Saigon, July 18.

Henri Bonvincini, director of the anti-Communist Saigon Press, was gravely wounded today by terrorists.

M. Bonvincini was shot in the head when he got into his automobile to drive to work. The bullet, from a Colt 45 calibre pistol, lodged in his brain.

After firing the terrorist hurled a British-type grenade into the car, but the grenade failed to explode.

Bonvincini, a bitter enemy of the Communist Vietnamese forces, had been "condemned to death" in broadcasts by the official Vietnamese radio, as were many other anti-Communists who had been similarly attacked.—United Press.

Another Kelly-Gromyko Talk Possible

London, July 18.

A British Foreign Office spokesman said today that Britain had received a full report of the talks which the Ambassador to Russia, Sir David Kelly, had last night with the Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister, Mr. Andrei Gromyko.

He said that the discussions were a continuation of earlier talks with Mr. Gromyko, but he would give no further information.

The spokesman emphasised that the steps taken by Mr. Nehru and the Gromyko-Kelly talks were entirely separate matters.

LANDING ON PISHAN

London, July 18.

The Chinese People's Liberation Army has taken Pishan Island, off the Chekiang coast and cleared it of Nationalist troops, according to a New China News Agency despatch received in London tonight.

Four hundred Kuomintang officers and men were captured and 50 killed. A unit of the People's Liberation Army launched an amphibious attack on Pishan Island—which lies about 40 miles north-east of Wenchow port—during the evening of July 15 and landed the following morning. The despatch added.—Reuter.

Russians With Korean Army

Washington, July 18.

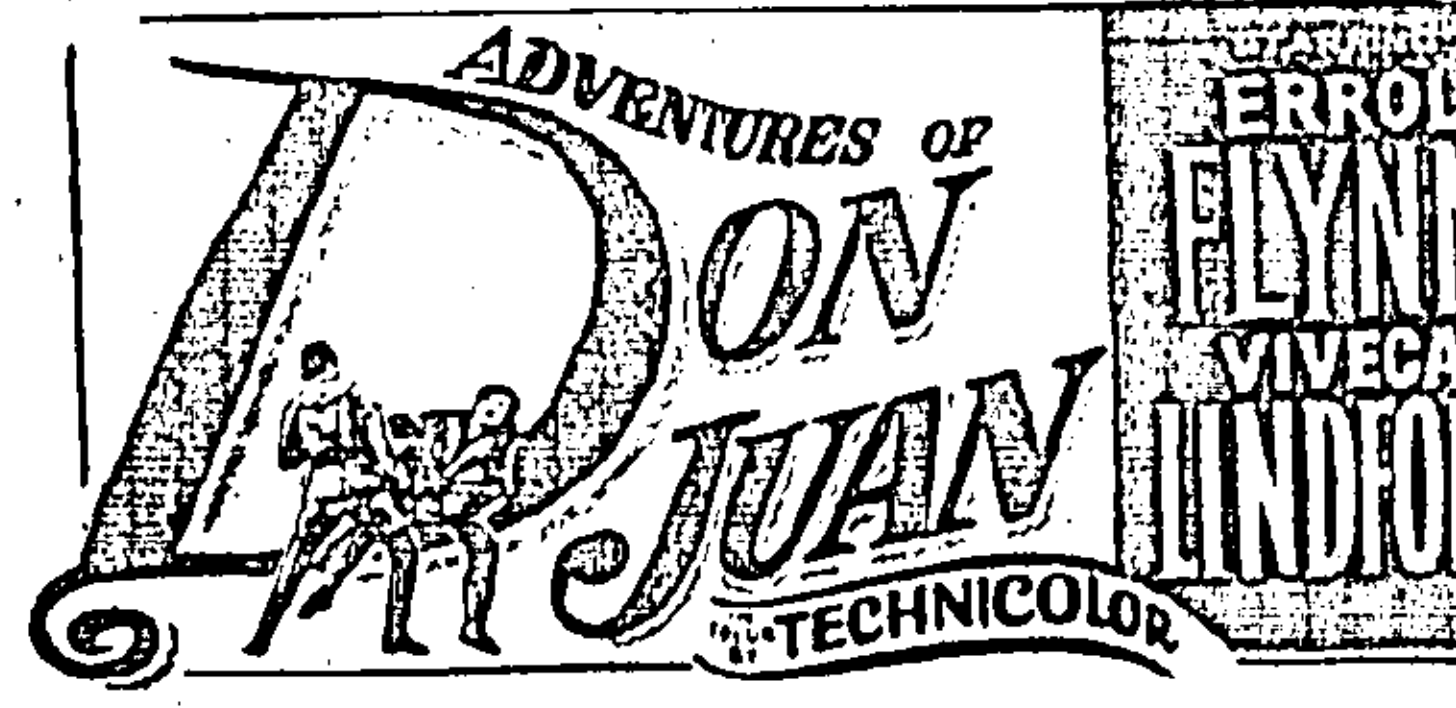

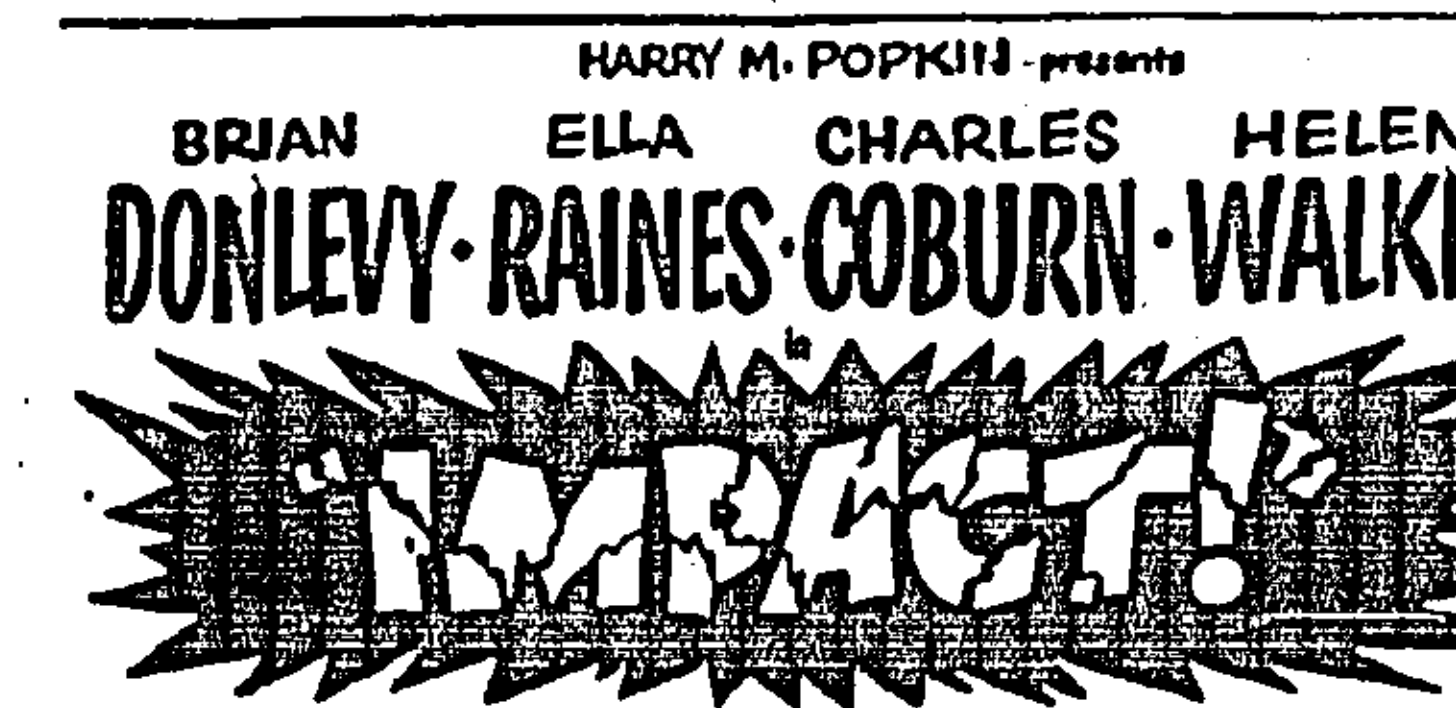

The United States Defense Department announced tonight that it had definite information that Russian advisers were working with "certain units" of the North Korean Army.

An army spokesman said that the information had been received that between 10 and 20 Russian officers were with the units. He said it was not known whether they were wearing Russian uniforms. "This is the first confirmation we have had that this situation exists," he said. "As far as we know, they are advisers," he added.—Reuter.

Summer Fashion Thoughts

IN a comprehensive summer collection of re-fined specialty dress types, a New York house added a new shade to the colour card. "Lime Rock," a pale smoky green as a new neutral taken its place with the beige and grays that are important throughout the shantung and pima cottons. Flimsy chiffon for cape-back long wraps floating over dark sheath dresses are done in big dots or dark for a sophisticated, attractive high style. "Cotton Chiffon" is the name given to the very sheer cottons, pin-tucked and tiered in some of the coolest dresses around. The back-surplice neckline, worked in a low V to match the front, impresses all the way through as a new and pretty detail.

Organdie Evening Tuck-ins

WHAT is most exciting about some new separate-outfits is that they are not just tuck-in tops and skirts, but often done in trio's with both a long and short skirt... or one short skirt with a choice of baretop and big sheer sleeved blouse. Most customers, will want to buy the whole scheme because it gives them the real benefits of separates.

When a long flame organdie skirt comes with a matching top embroidered in white it looks like a one-piece grand bouffant. It's romantic separates when it gets the off-shoulder white lace bertha blouse. Fourth piece here is a tiered white lace and organdie short skirt, add to the white lace bertha for a short white dance dress. A choice of gold sleeveless shantung top or big sleeve organdie comes with a tulle-trimmed skirt for two modern art colourings. Having done so much with chiffons in his last group, one designer carries them through, combined with lace for saleable "sleeves." If skin is very tender, be careful not to irritate it. To be on the safe side, use a cleansing cream especially designed for sensitive skins.

By HELEN FOLLETT

EXCESSIVELY dry skin is a torment. Lack of moisture in the air in homes and offices tends to aggravate the condition. If you belong to the class who feel as if their complexions were wasting away in the scales, attend religiously to your creaming sessions.

Remove make-up with cream. After the nightly face washing, have a five-minute friction with a heavy cream, permitting it to remain on over night. Ordinarily the sebaceous glands should supply a minute, but constant quantity of lubricating oil. The reason these little oil gushers give up the job is probably a diet deficiency. Not enough fat. Women who go on a reducing spree, cutting out fat entirely may find that the well-behaved complexion, about which they have never worried, has suddenly gone arid.

Sensitive Skin

There may be a few cases of skins of such extraordinary sensitiveness that soap-and-water treatment cannot be taken with comfort. In such event it can be dispensed with entirely, cream used as a cleanser. And to be on the safe side, women with very sensitive skins, should use a cream especially designed for them.

Good substitutes for soap are cosmetic meals, found in the toiletries departments of stores. Usually the base of these meals is powdered oatmeal that is especially soothing to an irritated epidermal surface. Sprinkle a little meal on a moist wash cloth, pass over the face lightly. Never wash the face directly before going out of doors. If the dry is cold, or immediately upon coming in. The best time is at night.

When washing your complexion use water that is not too warm as that will add to dryness. Cold water rinses, while excellent for toning tissues and acting as an astringent when large pores are present, is not desirable when the cutaneous covering is inclined to flake.

shantung, or down centre back. The lower buttons are left undone in many coats dress, slim and full skirts alike. Underlined and modest, but intriguing.

The bolero idea is important throughout in pimas and dresses, up skirts.

FOR EVENING, little crisp blossoms spattered over marquisette are charming. The chiffon, quite short over the left leg, baretop and 20-ish is done in plain and dot, too. Dotted nets in the beige-brown family and a lovely crinkle beige silk chiffon with capelet back are other special evening suggestions.

EMOTIONAL SECURITY IN A CHILD

By G. C. MYERS, Ph.D.

ASSUMING that the child has parents who themselves strive to be honest and truthful, the surest way for him to become so is to grow up in a family where he feels he is loved and wanted, feels he is emotionally secure. The first essential to this end is that his parents shall feel emotionally secure toward each other, that they shall truly love each other. Emotional insecurity, doubts, suspicions of deceit by one parent toward another can't be wholly hidden even from the tiny infant.

The child is born with the urge to take and use anything he can get his hands on. Slowly he must learn to respect the rights and possessions of others. He needs to learn early the meaning of "No." If he learns this from parents who are consistent with themselves and with each other he may have very few temptations to discover the child's because of the human frailties of his parents, discovers very early that he can have some things and do some things (otherwise forbidden him) when no one is watching; that, moreover, he can escape being found out by deceiving with words, by lying. Also he may grow more inclined to try to deceive the person toward whom he does not feel esteem and affection.

Begin At Home

Lying and stealing practically always begin at home and they usually go together. Basically they are one and the same—deceit.

Suppose your child lies to you. Of course, as all of us parents are humanly frail, we should expect some deceit in our children. We can first rule out the cases of wild imagination, which is really not lying but confusion of fact and fantasy. Nearly all such cases arise because the parent lacks understanding and imagination and accuses the child of lying when he supposed he had never been told the truth.

But suppose your child has been stealing things and lying to cover up his tracks. Don't put him on trial then with the purpose to convict and punish him. If you see your child taking things he knows are not his or catch him in the act of stealing (which you rarely will) immediate punishment might be effective.

Objective Evidence

But if you have the objective evidence beyond doubt that he has stolen, deal with him as you are sure is best. Tell him he is guilty, but don't be such a bully as to try to force him to confess then. If you don't have objective evidence, don't ask him about the matter. Don't put him on trial. Don't ask him to incriminate himself. Count on justice don't. When you force your child to testify against himself you put him in lying and cause his relations toward you to render him more ready to deceive. Just try to protect him from further temptation.

Study his usual ways of respecting the possessions of others in your presence. Consider the relationship within your whole family, especially between you and the younger members. If there are strained relations and lack of mutual trust between you parents you both might want, for the child's sake, to improve this relationship.

Ask yourself how the child feels toward each of you parents and other members of the family. Does he feel he is understood and loved as other children in the family? How worthy does he feel among his playmates?

Do anything you can to help him gain self-esteem and a feeling of worthwhileness. This will take time, patience, effort.

Household Hints

Material for a dressing table skirt may be salvaged from old net, marquisette or organdie curtains. Tinting will cover up the yellowing of age.

When you starch clothes in an automatic washer be sure to flush out the machine with warm water as soon as you're finished. This will eliminate the danger of starch drying on the garments or hoses.

Cool Salad For Warm Days

By ALICE DENHOFF

SALAD days are here, and so today we have some recipes for you.

To serve 6, mix with a fork 2 c. cooked green lima beans, 2 tsp. chopped parsley, one bud garlic chopped very fine, and one Bermuda onion, sliced thin. Gradually add ¼ c. salad oil and add, drop by drop, 1 tsp. vinegar. Chill thoroughly. Season with salt and pepper, and garnish with sliced tomatoes and sliced onions. When fresh lima beans are used, rinse immediately after cooking with cold water.

For a healthful salad, to serve 6, wash and remove stems 6 c. uncooked spinach. Drain and chop. Keep cold and crisp. Add, mix, and toss in French dressing ½ c. chopped celery and 2 chopped scallions. Garnish with slices of 2 hard-cooked eggs.

Hot Potato Salad

Hot potato salad, at least this version of it, maybe shouldn't have a place in a regular salad round-up. To serve 4, dice 5 slices bacon, fry until crisp, then remove bacon from skillet. Add to bacon fat one diced onion. Cook slightly. Add ¼ tsp. salt, 3 tsp. vinegar, dash of pepper, 3 to 5 tsp. sour cream. Add 3 c. diced cooked potatoes, turn well in broth, and serve at once.

For a nice luncheon or supper salad for 6. Place in chilled salad bowl 2 tomatoes cut in quarters, 4 spring onions (cut in fine pieces), 2 hearts of salad (cut up), 2 hard cooked eggs and 6 anchovies. Toss salad together lightly with French dressing.

Actress Mother Claims Sex Appeal

HOLLYWOOD. THE author who says American women have no sex appeal can get an argument any time he wants with Rhonda Fleming.

Miss Fleming denies she, and the rest of the girls, have no sex appeal. She denies she uses hundreds of dollars worth of cosmetics trying to get some. She denies she feels that women's life is an unnatural ordeal.

Anything else, Mr. Philip Wylie?

"What women is he talking about, anyway?" inquired Miss Fleming. "A lot of my friends are mothers. They think it's wonderful."

Wylie has written that most women look on the bearing of children as such an unnatural ordeal that they feel the mere act of motherhood enters them to resent from all other labors and responsibility.

Miss Fleming supports herself and her young son with her earnings from the Paramount picture, "Beyond the Sunset," and she doesn't ask sympathy from anyone.

Thinks It's a Privilege

"I think it's a privilege to raise a child," she said. "Who wants to be a martyr? Too much leisure is bad for anyone."

"Women with no responsibility can be unsatisfied looking for something but not knowing what. But motherhood gives me a feeling of inner security I might otherwise lack."

Miss Fleming doesn't have to say anything to reject Wylie's charge that a thousand North American women don't have enough sex appeal to budge a hermit six paces off a rock.

One look at her ought even to budge Wylie.

Because of her alleged lack of allure, Wylie said, the North American female spends several hundred dollars a year on permanents, lipsticks, cotton padding and steel corsets, to acquire some synthetically.

"My lipsticks last and last, I use them sparingly," Miss Fleming replied. "My hair is long and natural, and I like it that way. I don't wear corsets either."

"This is a democracy, and I like to feel free,"—United Press.

Summer Lingerie Trend

SUPPLEMENTING NYLON for summer lingerie wardrobes are silk, especially in power net elastics. Prospects are good for cotton foundations for summer, because the fabric itself is cool and absorbent; and because manufacturers have followed through with decorative effects to add eye appeal.

STRAPLESS BRAS once again take the fashion spotlight, because of the importance of low or bare necklines in fashions. Improved for eye appeal and fit, these bras come in sheer nylon, marquisette and cotton, as well as satin. Bras with detachable straps that can be worn three ways—halter fashion, strapless or with straps—offer extra wearability, and a new approach to strapless fashions.

Sir Victor, who is to give his daughter away, will arrive with his wife. Miss Mallet will wear a picture gown in white lace with veil of tulle. Her three bridesmaids and a page will wear white and red.

this financial year, and £750,000 at the end of the programme.

Look healthier

By repaying these amounts over 15 years instead of seven, the annual balance sheet of the restaurants will look healthier.

In the current year, for example, the new method would reduce the restaurant estimate from £944,175 to £770,175. This means the restaurants can earn £174,000 less and still show a book profit.

Retiring at 51

AFTER 20 years as head of the De Havilland aircraft company, Mr Alan S. Butler is retiring from the chairmanship and from the directorship he holds in the parent and associated companies.

Mr Butler is only 51. Why retire so young? Do Havilland's say he spends so much time abroad on the company's business that he feels no longer able to retain control at home. He will continue to travel overseas on the firm's business.

The new boss

Butler came into the De Havilland concern in a curious way. Sir Geoffrey de Havilland founded the company in 1920. In the early days, when money was short, Butler ordered an aeroplane. He was then a wealthy flying enthusiast. He offered De Havilland capital, subscribed £7,500, was made a director. Two years later became chairman.

Scientists' union

WHO are the men who run the Association of Scientific Workers, trade union of scientists who voted along the Communist line on Frances Gaiskell's bid for Communist atom chief, Professor Joliot-Curie?

President of the association is Lord Boyd Orr, former Director-General of the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organisation. As MP for Scottish Universities (1945-49) he sat as an Independent. In addition to the paid secretary, Mr Ainley, the ASW has an honorary general secretary, Dr W. A. Wood, of Cambridge University. He has long been an active worker in Left Wing causes, is a patron of British Peace Committee—the organisation just proscribed by the Socialist Party as a Communist campaign.

Communists

There are 13 vice-presidents. Two are Communists: Professor J. B. S. Haldane, a member of the Daily Worker editorial board, and Professor J. D. Bernal.

All the other vice-presidents are scientists of note: Professor Winifred Ellis (the only woman), Professor F. C. Danby, Dr J. Hammond, Dr Gregory, Dr J. H. D. Maclean, atom physicist Professor M. L. E. Oliphant, Sir John Russell, and radar pioneer Sir Robert Watson-Watt.

Gaiskell's dilemma

The association claim to have members in both Houses of Parliament. Their Journal, Scientific Worker, names them in the issue for May 1950.

In the Lords there is Lord Haden-Guest, former Socialist MP for North Islington, in addition to Lord Boyd Orr. In the Commons are four Socialists and one Conservative. The Tory is Mr C. L. Orr-Ewing, member for Hendon North.

The Socialists are Mr W. J. Field, Mr J. Lewis, and Major Wilfred Vernon who is described as a member of the ASW's Executive Committee, and "our most active member in the House."

The fourth is a Minister: Mr Hugh Gaiskell, Minister for Economic Affairs.

Mackenzie's 'ride'

AFTER two years of research and writing, a author Compton Mackenzie has completed the first volume of his official history of the Indian Army. It is called Eastern Epic, has 300,000 words.

Now, before he writes Volume II, Mackenzie, aged 67, embarks upon a new assignment: a "rural ride" in England. He is to write a book describing National Trust properties.

The "ride" will last a month, the book will be little more than 20,000 words long.

In fact, it will be no ride. Mackenzie is travelling to Windermere by train. There he will travel by car.

MISS ANNE MALLETT, daughter of Sir Victor Mallet, British Ambassador in Rome, has come to London to prepare for her wedding to Lord Dunboyne.

Lord Normanby will be best man. The honeymoon will be in Ireland.

Staying British

ACTOR Francis L. Sullivan sailed back to America after a brief visit home. His wife, stage designer Dorian Gaylen, follows him soon. They are giving up their flat in Robert Street, Adelphi, because they spend so much time in America.

There has been talk that the Sullivan would become American citizens. Mrs Sullivan tells me this is not so. They are to be "resident aliens" in the United States, a status which will enable both to hold jobs there.

As a link with their homeland, the Sullivans are keeping their country home at Hadenmore.

Duke in hired yacht

FEW people can now afford their own yachts. So ship brokers are doing good business in yacht charters.

The Duke of Westminster, who owned two yachts before the war, has chartered one for a fishing cruise in the North Sea. He and the Duchess have taken two friends on this trip in the 500-ton Radiant, which once belonged to Lord Hliffe. They will be away a month.

Cost of chartering a yacht depends on its tonnage, and the number of crew engaged.

£500 a month

A 150-tonner, with crew of four, and accommodation for nine, costs £500 a month.

One of the few private British owners with a yacht now in the Mediterranean is Mrs Bernard Fellows. Her yacht Slater Anne (240 tons) is full of labour-saving devices, and has a bathroom to every cabin. There is accommodation for six passengers and crew of eight.

At the end of the month Sir Bernard and Lady Docker set off for the South of France in his 800-ton yacht Schemara. This yacht, built in 1938, cost £100,000, carries a crew of 31. Several guests have been invited for the cruise.

Also on board will be Lance, Lady Docker's son by her first marriage. He is 11.

COLD WAR and the COLONIES

FROM OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENT

DOUBT AS TO THE WISDOM OF EMPLOYING SIMPLY THE ECONOMIC WEAPONS TO SAVE SOUTHEAST ASIA AND OTHER TERRITORIES FROM COMMUNISM IS EXPRESSED BY ELSBETH HUXLEY, THE WELL-KNOWN WRITER ON COLONIAL AFFAIRS.

In a special article on "The Cold War and the Colonies", in the current issue of the monthly magazine, "Nineteenth Century", she asks how the principles decided upon the Colombo and Sydney conferences are to be of any practical value within "the next decade, 'the decade that is to be crucial in the cold war.'"

No-one questions the urgent need for great economic developments throughout Asia and Africa, but, she argues, while the standard of living of the few in these territories may be advanced by economic aid such as is now planned, the aim of a higher standard of living for the masses is not feasible.

First things to be done to raise eastern standards are "to grow more food of all kinds, to raise more timber for fuel and housing, and to teach millions of people the elements of hygiene," and that, according to Mrs Huxley is going to take at least 40 years.

WESTERN MISTAKE

Going on to ask what the Communists will be up to between now and 1960, she says that if all goes well for Communist tactics, at the moment when nationalist pressure reaches a point where British withdrawal is bound to take place, "Communist influence will be strong enough to swing the emergent nation into the orbit of the Russian sun, there to revolve obediently as another Eastern satellite."

Western leaders were making a mistake in accepting Marxist terms and treating the struggle as an economic one.

The main task of Western strategy, Mrs Huxley declares, should be concerned more with economic matters than with the satisfaction of the latent loyalties of the Asian and African peoples.

And here, she goes on, "we should be unwise to look to institutions dominated by the white races."

"We must start from nationalism, now deeply planted in the east; our task is to see it turned into a constructive and independent patriotism, and to widen the loyalties of the new leaders into a wish to serve their country and not merely themselves."

"Symbols of authority and nationalism should emerge. The King, the prince, the sultan, the chief, the living person is needed to focus loyalty and affection, rather than the impersonality of committees and creeds."

THE ANSWER

Mrs Huxley thinks the West has remained too much on the defensive.

"It is surely a looking glass situation," she writes, "that a power which, in the last eight years, has bludgeoned into subservience, and all but obliterated some eight once-sovereign nations, should pose as the champion of nationalism, while a power, which, during the same period, has freely and willingly granted complete independence to four former satellites should be stigmatised as an oppressor."

Yet that is the position between Russia and ourselves. We had failed to make that clear to the oriental leaders.

The answer to the appeal of Communism, she concludes, lies not in the narrow field of economics but in the wider and far more subtle one of history and psychology.

Economic development "in a spiritual vacuum is a brittle weapon that would break in Western hands." The first objectives were the "Hopes and imaginations of the Colonial leaders" and to reach these would need all our ingenuity and skill.

END OF A LONG RIDE

Police constable James Lord talks with weary little David Delgado, four, in Dovington, Hertfordshire, England. The lad completed a 9,000-mile trip via Miami Havana, Bermuda and Gander after the plane he travelled on was held up due to regulations of an Anglo-U. S. air agreement which prevented the plane's scheduled landing at London.

EMPIRE CABLES

Dr Theo sees the road out

From CHARLES WIGHTON

PRETORIA.—South Africa may soon move out of the Empire and become a republic, Dr Theo Domes, Minister of the Interior, said in a speech in the Nationalist stronghold of Rustenburg, 60 miles west of Pretoria.

He startled the country with this statement. "As a result of the London conference, the path of allegiance to the King is no longer necessary, and that has opened a tarred road to a republic."

Tarred roads are still a novelty in South Africa, which mostly has rutted dirt tracks. And to most South Africans a tarred road means "full speed ahead."

But since taking office Malan and his Ministers have shown the greatest restraint about their proposal for a republic.

So Domes' speech reopening the issue is a big surprise. He gave this plan for South Africa, with its 2,000,000 white people and 10,000,000 Negroes:—"Our ideal is to establish a nation and a white civilisation. Our children's children must live in a European country."

M.P. gaoled

KINGSTON, Jamaica.—A. G. S. ("Father") Coombs, who in 1927 sponsored the country into trade unionism of labour leader William Bustamante, has been gaoled for 30 days for disorderly conduct. Coombs, a Socialist member of the House of Representatives, will not forfeit his seat.

Fast work

BOMBAY.—Mrs Rallat Ben, Gandhi's 83-year-old sister, entered politics and bent the State Government to her will within 24 hours. An order raising college and school fees was withdrawn after Mrs Ben started a hunger strike in protest against it.

No itchy palms

DARWIN.—Raden Utoyo, first Indonesian Ambassador to Australia, said on arrival here: "Australia need not fear that we will claim eastern New Guinea. We keep our hands off other countries' affairs."

Safety in width

SYDNEY.—Forty-eight-year-old Mrs Doris McGuirk fell over a 200-ft. cliff on 10 rocks near Sydney. Her wide dress billowed out and acted as a parachute. She was only slightly bruised.

Modern Menace

WASHINGTON: The motor-car has killed nine times as many Americans as all the wars in which the United States has been involved since it fought Britain for independence in 1776. Statistics issued by the National Safety Council show that 942,000 have been killed and 32,070,000 injured from accident caused by automobiles.

London, July 1950.

NEW postal arrangements

just announced by the Postmaster General will mean that small parcels sent from Britain to some places in the Far East will cost only about a third of previous minimum air freight charges.

Until these new arrangements came into effect on July 7 the minimum weight of an air freight parcel was one kilogram and charges—particularly for people in this country wishing to send comforts to their husbands and sons in the British Forces—were exorbitant.

8s. 6d. TO H.K.

The minimum cost of a parcel under these arrangements and including customs charges etc., was: to Hongkong—27s 3d; to Singapore—26s 11d; and to Kuala Lumpur 25s 3d.

The new air parcel post service will allow a minimum of half a pound to be sent by air and minimum charges will be: to Hongkong—8s 6d; to Singapore—8s 9d; and to Kuala Lumpur 8s 9d.

Export licensing and currency control requirements are the same as for parcels sent by surface routes.

STALIN'S GOLD WAR IS A GREATER MENACE

WHEN a $500,000 cargo of Russian gold was landed in Glasgow from the freighter Samdonard, the crew were told they were handling cavare for the Russian Embassy in London. When a $250,000 stack of Moscow bullion was transferred from Soviet to American planes, a reporter was bluntly warned: "Mention it in the newspapers—and we'll have you thrown off the airport."

Amid intensive secrecy, a rich flow of Moscow gold is moving around the world, transferring into dollars in New York banks, paying big bills for machinery and raw materials. The total cannot be assessed, yet Russian gold sales are already shaking the finances of the world. In one day on the Paris Bourse, so much gold was put on the market that the price of the metal fell 10 percent.

On the same day sudden large-scale gold sales occurred in Amsterdam, Brussels, Madrid and other centres. Nearly 20 tons—or $6,000,000 worth—were dumped on the market in Zurich alone.

Between Wars

BETWEEN the wars, Russia was so insolvent that national treasures were sold to pay for machinery and tools. Russian trade delegates, for instance, pledged a cluster of jewels in New York for $20,000 to pay their expenses. Recently the Fire Government announced that the loan has been repaid. The pledge was redeemed with dollars bought with Stalin's mysterious bars of bullion.

In Britain, similarly, the Soviets have been shopping avidly. Apparently their gold-lined purses have inexhaustible reserves. They spent a million at Vickers for heavy mechanical presses, a million in Liverpool for coal-mining, telephone and signalling gear, and around $5,000,000 on electric generating plant.

Stacked in Siberia today is 11 times more gold than in the Bank of England. The icy wastes are proving richer than the Rand, and the Kremlin has enough wealth to finance subversive activity anywhere on the globe.

BY

R.W. PHELPS-ORION

They have bought football boots in Birmingham, telephones and enormous tide predictors in London, futuristic diesel-electric trains, Rolls-Royce engines, bicycles and Yorkshire wool and much else besides.

They have spent millions, too, in a New York shopping spree, buying up $1,000,000 worth of petroleum products, $25,000,000 worth of industrial machinery, $5,000,000 worth of machine tools. One firm booked an order for 1,500,000 agricultural jeeps. Altogether, Washington reveals, as much as $200,000,000 has been spent by Iron Curtain countries within a single year.

Vast Payments

TO cover these vast dollar payments, Soviet gold shipments to the U.S.A. have been running second only to those from South Africa. Where is all the gold coming from? Far from being poverty-stricken, the U.S.S.R. has hit the jackpot. Over an area six times larger than Britain, in the remote northeast shoulder of Siberia, Stalin has charted a new Edendale.

In the 1,000-mile zone from the Sea of Okhotsk to the Arctic Ocean, the rivers and streams are lined with gold. The frozen soil is seamed with veins of incredible richness. In the gulches of a newly-discovered mountain range lie the tremendous mother lodes, solid and accessible as if poured molten from the extinct volcanoes. Over this wide terrain, 10,000 mining settlements are working on a 24-hour rota under electric lights in the Arctic night, summer and winter. Altogether, there are 70 great goldfields, scattered loosely along the Kolyma River, each representing probably a bigger strike than the Klondike.

For fifteen years the very existence of these phenomenal deposits has been a Soviet top secret. "Very soon we shall overtake the Rand mines and thus take the world's first place as gold producers," so said Serebrensky, head of the Soviet Gold Trust, in an unwary press announcement before the curtain closed. In 1935, moreover, the U.S.S.R. State Bank abruptly discontinued its annual gold production figures.

Gold was, of course, found in Siberia as long ago as 1043. Until the Bolsheviks took over after World War I, a British firm was working the main concession along the Lena River. The gold was coarse, however, and involved expensive mining work, drifting through the old travels. Somewhere to the east, the persistent main reefs still lay undiscovered.

Rouble Rush

THEN came the rouble rush when adventurous Russians were given a free chance of prospecting, and the Gold Trust agreed to pay up to $9,000 gold roubles (£200,000) for every new unexplored deposit. There was an outsize snag. The gold roubles could be used only in the Gold Trust's own stores in Siberia, but the freedom of life appealed to thousands of thrill-seekers.

An army of intrepid men and women pushed ever farther into the unexplored for—draped wastes that lay beyond the recesses of primal lush forest. They stumbled unexpectedly on molybdenum, copper, zinc, precious stones, silver, goldfields of lesser magnitude—and then came the fantastic Kolyma find.

Vague rumours of what was happening crept by word of mouth through the Arctic Eskimos. Official Russian cartels mention the goldfields except for enigmatic references to the "Far North Project." Yet they are now believed to absorb one person in every ten of the five to 12 million undergoing forced labour.

Embracing the whole Kolyma area, the Far North Project has its own police system and secret police, its own legislative organisation, its own aircraft and military defence. These in turn lie within a greater defence zone. The principal link with the outside world is a direct telephone line to the Kremlin. Though few ever return to tell the stories of iron curtain refugees—including eye-witnesses who crossed the bleak, uninhabited tundra, eluded the pursuing police dogs and crossed the Behring Straits—slowly resolve into a close mesh of facts.

One Survivor

ONE survivor, now a professor of Yale University, tells of endless slave gangs from the penal camps digging at ground thawed by steam, pounding the frozen particles of earth to break them up, of 100,000 prisoners in one camp who died in six years. Gradually the fantastic picture emerges—the nightmare rumble of open cast excavators, the fevered digging (which continued all through the war), the felons toiling behind barbed wire in the glaring arc-lamps.

Twenty-five years ago all this region was so scantily explored that a 1,000-mile mountain chain, high and long as the Rockies, was actually mapped 500 miles off true. Twenty years ago, when the first slave ships sailed into the treacherous bay of Nagai, not as much as a fisherman's cabin relieved the barren shoreline. Today the new city of Magadan faces the ocean, with brick administration buildings, broad apartment blocks and streets of concrete prefabricated cabins—a metropolis of 40,000 mining technicians.

From Magadan, a 350-mile road weaves overland to the southernmost goldfields. A single side road, it is known, leads to the bullion vaults—Stalin's equivalent of the Fort Knox gold depository, locked in the heart of the mountains. The size of this vast gold hoard can perhaps be closely gauged from Russian gold shipments.

Assessment

BRIEFLY, the seasoned experts of the U.S. Federal Reserve assess Russia's yearly goldmining output at $100,000,000 running over closer to South Africa's $117,000,000, and Stalin's total bullion hoard at $5,000,000,000 or 11 times more than the gold reserves of the Bank of England. Stalin's gold output already exceeds that of the U.S.A. and Canada combined. Within five years it may equal the entire output of all the rest of the world. At his elbow Stalin already has enough wealth to finance subversive activity anywhere on the globe.

Kolyma spells a weapon capable of upsetting the precarious balance of world trade. The cold war, in fact, may be far less menacing than the gold war.

Sitting On The Fence

By . . . Nathaniel Gubbins

"To strengthen abdominal muscles," writes a yoga expert, "sit erect, hands on knees. With hip movement to the right, start a rotary or 'churning' movement of the whole abdominal region, drawing the abdomen up below the ribs and squeezing the intestines against the spine. You can do this anywhere, in buses or trains."

The scene is a first-class railway compartment. In one corner a stout man is trying to read a newspaper. Opposite is a thin, intense man grunting as he rotates his abdomen.

WHAT the devil are you doing, sir? Churning my stomach, sir.

Is your stomach full of milk, sir? No, sir.

Then what are you churning it for, sir? To exercise it, sir. Yoga, sir.

Damn it, sir, do you consider this the proper place for an exhibition of foreign mumbo jumbo?

I've paid for my seat, sir. So have I, sir. In that case you're entitled to churn your own stomach.

My stomach doesn't need churning, sir. By the size of it I would say it needs churning, kneading, and slapping, sir.

How dare you, sir. What the devil are you doing now? Drawing my abdomen up below my ribs and squeezing my intestines against my spine, sir.

Great heavens, sir. Doesn't it make you sick, sir? Frequently, sir.

In case of accidents, I shall remove myself to another compartment, sir. You're just in time, sir.

Front line at home

It is predicted that if another world war should break out front-line battles will be televised.

Front-line troops may find this yet another cross to bear, particularly as the swifter advance of science in war may produce the two-way talkie television.

Then the bumbos who want to make the dear boys happy will organise television chats between one of the dear boys in a rest billet behind the line and the plucky little woman at home.

HULLO, George. Hullo, Mabel.

You all right? Yes, I'm all right. Kids all right?

Yes, they're all right. You don't art look dirty, George. Look at your face.

Or course, I'm dirty. What do you think this is? An old day camp?

You don't ave to be sarky, George. What are you goin to do now? Ave a nice rest?

Not me, I'm goin out with the boys.

Out where? Round to the old estaminet to see Mademoiselle Cord, what a smashin type.

Smashin type? No. As you were. She ain't smashin. She's more like your old Aunt Aggie.

You don't ave to insult my relation, what are you goin there for?

Eggs and chips and the old vin blanc.

What's that? A drink? Not art it ain't.

Look! ere, George. Don't get like you was last Christmas leave.

Pipe down on that. Besides, we can't afford it, George. Little Will's needin new boots, and Doreen's growin out of everythink. Well, so long, Mabel. I'm off now.

So long, George. With I was there to look after you, Mr. too. I don't think.

U.S. commentary

O.K. I get that. There are two batmen. And they run once between the wickets to score one run. Don't they have to hit the ball somewhere to score?

Yes. Then why ain't they hittin' it?

They don't want to get out. Do they always get out when they hit it?

Not always. Oh, Bravo. Listen to the cheers.

Cheers for what? That was a maiden over. Six balls batted without a score.

In everybody glad when nothin' happens? It's not quite that. The bouncer has been skillful enough to prevent the batsman hitting a score.

I thought you said he didn't want to hit the ball in case he got out.

That's because we're playing for time and because he's not really a batsman.

That's what I thought. But what is he?

A bowler. Then what's he batting for? All bowlers have to bat. Do all batsmen have to bowl?

No. Why? Because some can't bowl. Then why does a man who can't bat have to be a batsman?

It's one of the rules. About this playing for time. What happens?

If we can stay in all day we stand off.

Then who wins? Nobody. Well that's fine. That's swell. That's what makes the game so fascinating.

When you've watched this game for 30 years you'll understand.

Gezza. Has this game been going on for 30 years?

That game of cricket has been going on for at least two centuries.

O.K. fella. You win. Let's skip it.

Hollo, Chumley

TO the question asked in Pravda: "Is it true that language was always of a class character?" Field Marshal - Generalissimo-Lance-Corporal Stalin answers "No."

As he admits in the same article that "he doesn't know anything about philology, it might have been better if he had left the matter alone."

For what is true about Britain is probably true about any other country. That is to say, the upper, or educated, classes have a language and pronunciation quite distinct from the growlings and mutterings of the semi-literate peasants.

It is also true of surnames and place names. Take the classic case of the English name Cholmondeley, which, for the purpose of fixing the peasantry and making foreigners look silly, is pronounced Chumley.

An American once told me he thought he would be smart about English name pronunciation when he first came here. He knew about Chumley for Cholmondeley, Grove-ner for Grosvenor, and "Warwick for Warwick."

When told that Planagenet was pronounced as spell, the American decided to call all Englishmen Smith. Then he met one called Smythe and went home defeated.

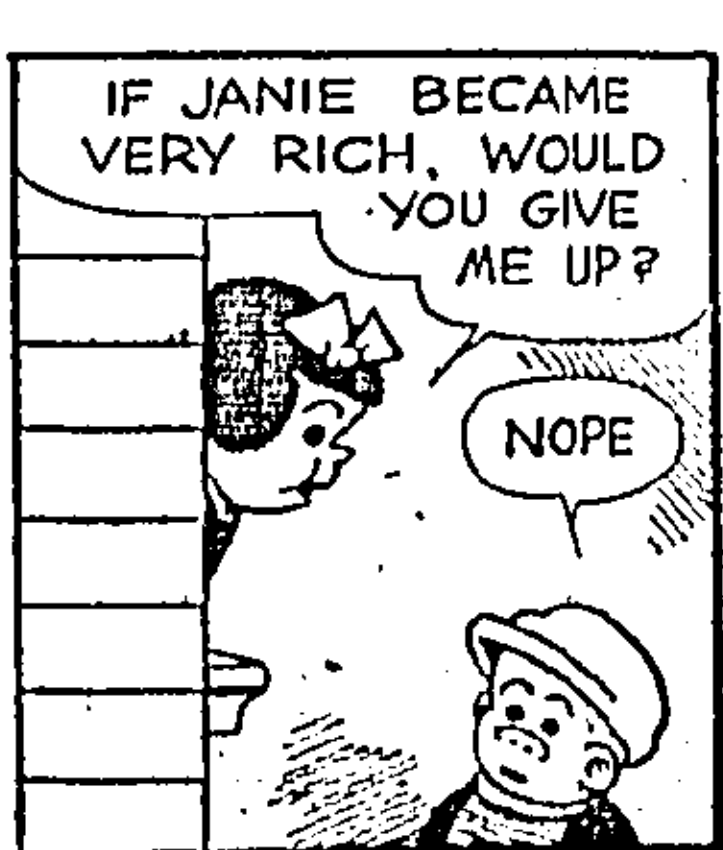

It's the same with Mokpo, south-west of Seoul, in Korea. Some call it Mookpo, some Mukpo, and some Muck-poo-poo.

The natives call it Muckpot, which it is.

North expects no quarter and gives none

THE RED CROSS IS NOT KNOWN IN KOREA

Britain's air defences are 'alarming'

London, July 18. Air Marshal Sir Guy Garrod, Chairman of the British Empire Air League, today criticised the Government for sending the latest type of fighter aircraft to its Western allies while the state of Britain's air defences was "worse than alarming."

He told a League luncheon here that in a grave and deteriorating international situation the air defence of Britain was seriously deficient.

Sir Guy Garrod, Deputy Commander of the Allied Mediterranean Air Force during the war, maintained that the R.A.F. today was not prepared to deal with any emergency that might arise anywhere in the foreseeable future.

BELOW STRENGTH

The auxiliary air force and volunteer reserve were 75 per cent below strength. Coastal Command was but a shadow of its once powerful force with many of its aircraft antiquated and fighter squadrons were being strengthened on a plan which would not be completed until the end of next year, he said.—Reuter.

KOREA FIGHTING

one other vehicle, two bridges. They also blocked a pass near Yonpung in central Korea where an enemy motorised column was reported to be moving.—United Press.

SUBMARINES!

Tokyo, July 18. General MacArthur's revelation today that three unidentified submarines were sighted off the Korean coast introduced a new element of danger in the Korean war.

Hostile undersea craft could menace any Allied amphibious operation and maintenance of supply lines between Japan and Korea.

A spokesman of General MacArthur's headquarters said that units of the American Navy sighted the submarines on the surface. There was no indication of nationality.

Before the Korean war numerous reports of unidentified submarines passing through Tsushima Straits, between Korea and Japan, had been received.

Captain Shin Sung-mo, Korean Minister of Defence, told Reuter in Seoul last month that the Russians were training the North Koreans in submarine warfare at Rasin, about 100 miles south of Vladivostok.

Among Allied precautionary measures are three Royal Air Force Sunderland flying boats, suitable for long distance anti-submarine patrols, which recently arrived at Iwakuni, Japan, from Hongkong.

Meanwhile, on land in Korea, American artillery, booming suddenly, broke the lull along the Western front late tonight as both sides caught their breath for the next phase of the campaign.

BUILDING UP

Just how long the lull inside the broken Kum River line would last no one could conjecture. Reuter's correspondent, Edward Wilson, reported from his post with American forces in the area. There were signs that the North Koreans were building up in the neighbourhood of Yonpung, eight miles west of embattled Taejon.

A radio message heard here from Seoul, the fallen South Korean capital, claimed, however, that Yonpung, east coast rail town 92 miles north of the all important south-eastern supply base of Pusan, had fallen to the invaders.

The broadcast also claimed the capture of Yangyang, several miles inland, and said that advancing North Koreans had linked up with Communist guerrillas.

NEXT STAND

Reuter's correspondent, Roy Macarthey, reports that American troops, fighting tough, delaying action battles, are likely to make their next stand in the hills east of Taejon if the North Koreans force them out of a line now fanned tightly to west and north of the town.

Taejon lies on a flat, dusty plateau, and though an important rail junction, enjoys no natural defences.

East of Taejon, however, the main road and railway draw together to enter steep, rocky foothills and mountains.

Whereas the 24th American Division tried to hold two roads approaching Taejon and patrol others to prevent outflanking, it will in future be able to concentrate its main strength astride only one, highway to stop or delay a North Korean advance.—Reuter.

Wounded have been murdered as they waited

By ROBERT C. MILLER

With the U.S. Forces at Taejon Front July 18.

There are no Red Crosses in the Korean war. They give the Communists a better target to shoot at. The medics carry rifles for their own protection. The wounded are often evacuated by tanks. Mercy is just about unknown.

The percentage of casualties among doctors and corpsmen has equalled that among the combat troops and in many cases is higher. The enemy expects no quarter and gives none.

Americans entered the Korean war with polished bright crosses on their ambulances and flags flying from their litter jeeps. Corpsmen who attended the wounded wore arm bands and carried no weapons.

"What a bunch of innocents we were," Private (first class) Edward Wilson, of Chico, California, said today.

For today there is no frontline medic who has not been under fire at one time or another trying to bandage wounds and evacuate the injured.

Wounded murdered

Several collecting stations have been overrun and the wounded murdered. At least two doctors have been killed while tending wounded at frontline hospitals.

Sergeant Roy Stewart, of Chester, Illinois, said the first time the medics did was to point out the Red Cross insignia.

He said: "We tried leaving some on the roof for air identification. But that just drew more fire. So we painted them out, too."

Captain Donald L. Duerk, of Freeport, New York, medical officer, said his medical company was "shot to pieces" by the Communists.

He said: "Handling wounded has been a terrible problem. The infiltrating enemy gives no respect for the Red Cross and often seem to wait until we get our load of wounded aboard before they attack us."

Risking death

"The real heroes of the war are the litter jeep drivers and corpsmen who drive through enemy roadblocks and fighting lines to bring out wounded."

Never once have they refused a call, even though it often meant risking death and injury.

Many times it has been necessary for us to load our wounded into tanks to get them through enemy roadblocks to safety."

Britain takes a bow

Washington, July 18. The State Department spokesman today expressed gratification at the prompt action taken by Britain, because of the Korean war, in requisitioning all stocks of oil in the Far East.

The Foreign Office announcement in London also said that stocks of oil in China by British companies had ceased.—Reuter.

Russian jets seen in Korea

Washington, July 18. An Air Force spokesman said on Tuesday that North Korean jet fighters, reported to have been seen in the Korean area, may be Russian-built MIG-15 fighters.

This type of plane was last seen in about mid-April in the Shanghai area. The plane was reported to have been seen on Monday near Chongju by Army ground forces.

The spokesman said he had no confirmation from Air Force personnel. He indicated that American air force pilots had not seen any jet fighter opposition.

The spokesman was also unable immediately to report on any of the characteristics of the MIG-15 fighter.

TOKEN PASSES

The spokesman said North Korean planes have made token passes at American jet F-80 fighters, but he said, he thought this was to give the impression to North Korean ground forces that they still had air cover and support. He said Japanese used this same subterfuge in the last few months of World War II.—United Press.

LEOPOLD FRICTION

Brussels, July 18. Informed Parliamentary sources said tonight that exiled King Leopold was expected to delay his return to the throne until Belgium's biggest postwar military parade, on Friday, in celebration of Independence Day.

The Socialist Party had hinted earlier its belief that Leopold would return on Friday and review the parade. The Socialists had called for a "mass" anti-Leopold demonstration at the same time, but a Parliamentary development later indicated Leopold probably would not return until Saturday.—United Press.

No miscarriage of justice in Ceylon

London, July 18.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council today gave reasons for their dismissal last month of the appeal by Kannangara Aratchige Dharmasena against his conviction by the Supreme Court of Ceylon, sitting at Colombo, on two charges of conspiracy to commit murder, and murder.

Dharmasena was sentenced to death by the Supreme Court and his conviction affirmed by the Court of Criminal Appeal.

At the trial he was charged with Mrs. Beatrice Maude Silva Senewiratne wife of the murdered man, who lived at College Street, Kottahena, with conspiracy.

He was also charged with murder, and Mrs. Senewiratne with abetting.

The Jury found both guilty of conspiracy and Dharmasena guilty of murder, but in accordance with the Judge's direction made no finding as to abetment.

Both appealed to the Court of Criminal Appeal, who quashed the conviction of Mrs. Senewiratne of conspiracy and granted in her case a new trial, at which she was found not guilty and acquitted.

Lord Porter, who gave their Lordships' judgment, said that at the second trial Alice Nona, an important.

Prosecution witness, proved so unreliable that the Jury stopped the case on the invitation of the Judge.

After this verdict, the position was that of two conspirators, one of whom had been found guilty by one Jury and the other acquitted by another—an impossible result where conspiracy was concerned.

But though the appellant's conviction of the charge of conspiracy should have been quashed together with that of his alleged co-conspirator, and though he, like her, should have been sent for a re-trial, it must now be decided whether the question of whether he should also have been acquitted on the charge of murder.

NOT PERSUADED

On the evidence, said Lord Porter, it was plain that there was ample material on which a Jury could convict Dharmasena. Though, as the Court

Boys of 18 no good for Malaya

London, July 18.

The War Minister, Mr. John Strachey, today contested the view that National Servicemen (conscripts) were unsuitable in the campaign against the Communist guerrillas in Malaya.

In the House of Commons, a Labour member, Mr. Raymond Blackburn, had urged a special volunteer force for Malaya of people experienced in Commando and similar operations in the last war.

Properly trained, they would be much more effective, he said. Korea had shown that young conscripts were not the best to use at that stage of war.

Mr. Strachey said he did not take the view that National Servicemen had proved unsuitable for the war in Malaya. From such personal observations as he could make when he visited Malaya in May, he took a very different view.

Earlier, Mr. Strachey, replying to a question, said that some 1,500 National Servicemen called up under the 1948 National Service Act had been sent to Malaya between January 1, 1949, and May 31, 1950. Since May, 1950, it had been the rule that National Servicemen must serve four and a half months before being sent to Malaya. The average period was slightly higher. National Servicemen must continue to be sent abroad to the extent that Britain's commitments made it necessary, he said.

BOYS OF 18!

Mr. Ellis Smith, Labour, who had raised the matter, said that some boys of 18, just finished training for three months, were now on draft leave before going to Malaya and Hongkong. An undertaking was given during the passing of the 1948 Act through Parliament that no boy under 19 was sent abroad. During the war no boy under 19 was sent abroad, he declared.—Reuter.

Moscow's Hand In Korean Struggle

London, July 18.

As the fighting in Korea settles into what will now clearly be a protracted struggle, the wider implications of the situation which it has created are beginning to fall into some sort of perspective. The Korean issue can be assessed simultaneously in three different ways.

First, as a straight test of strength between the Communist and non-Communist parts of the world. In this test, the Communists have the military advantage of surprise and what now clearly emerges as careful advance preparations.

Second, as a battle of prestige between America and the Soviet Union, in which the outcome of the Korean clash will influence the attitude of those countries which are still undecided as to their allegiance in the developing world struggle.

Third, as a crisis in the history of the United Nations, which has just completed five years of chequered existence, as the meeting place of the Soviet, Communist, and Western Powers.

HANDS FREE

As far as Korea itself is concerned, it becomes more and more obvious that Moscow selected its ground carefully, and is in a position from which it can hope to exploit the situation to Soviet advantage while ever way the situation develops.

With no treaty obligations to North Korea, with no troops engaged in the fighting (as far as it yet known) and with no commitment in the United Nations resolutions on Korea, Russia has her hands free for manoeuvre.

For the moment, until the launch of the North Korean offensive is checked by United Nations forces under General MacArthur, there is little doubt that it suits Moscow very well to hold her hand and confound the field.

By denouncing America as an imperialist aggressor and calling for popular agitation in Korea, Soviet propaganda conveniently kills two birds with one stone: the inherent longing for peace in all sections of world opinion.

VESTED INTEREST

It strengthens the arguments of the organisers of the Peace Campaign in collecting signatures throughout the world for peace resolutions, worded in general terms and calculated to enlist support among all unpatriotically-minded people who fear and detect war.

In the Far East, it appeals to the post-war surge of nationalism in countries which traditionally suspect the Western Power of nursing imperialism designs at the expense of their newly-won independence and sovereignty.

It, in due course, suits Moscow's book for Russia to resume her role as a member of the United Nations, or even, without that, to use her influence with the North Koreans, she could then claim this as a triumph for Soviet diplomacy in the cause of peace.

FEWER RISKS

By acting uncompromisingly and promptly, the United States and the United Nations did much to restore faith in international action in the face of aggression.

well-prepared forces of aggression, it will nevertheless tend to lose confidence in American strength unless reasonably quick successes are registered.

GLOBAL DEFENCE

One of the main fears of the countries on the periphery of Communist and non-Communist spheres of influence, both in Europe and in the Far East, is precisely that they would be swallowed up in the first wave of Communist aggression before effective assistance could be mobilised.

Already in Washington there are signs that the machinery of Congressional approval for the successive steps involved in the global defence has been jolted out of its peacetime tempo into something approaching the urgency it achieved in wartime under full Presidential direction.

It is against this background that Britain and Russia carried out diplomatic exchanges in Moscow on the possibility of Russia using her influence in North Korea to bring the fighting to an end.

These exchanges, which began at the outbreak of the hostilities with a formal British request that Moscow should co-operate in checking the spread of fighting, were conducted under the disadvantages that whereas Britain as a member of the United Nations and a subscriber to the resolutions of the Security Council, obviously based her attitude on the action of the United Nations, Moscow had meanwhile denounced these in the most sweeping and uncompromising terms.

UNDERCURRENT

An undercurrent of anxiety has been noticeable here that the Korean incident, which so far shows reasonable signs of remaining localised, may be superseded by complications in Formosa.

Whereas the action in Korea is conducted by the United Nations, any action arising out of President Truman's declared intention of defending Formosa against an attack by Communist China would find the members of the non-Communist part of the United Nations of differing opinions.

The United States recognises the Nationalist Government of China now in refuge on Formosa. Britain does not, and although not in diplomatic relations with the Peking regime, has formally recognised it as the Government of China.

Whereas Russia has no commitment in Korea, she has a military obligation to China under the terms of the Sino-Soviet treaty of mutual friendship and assistance, which China might invoke in the event of a clash over Formosa.

The American view that Formosa is Japanese territory, in spite of the Allied wartime declaration of intention to return it to the Republic of China—until the conclusion of a Japanese peace treaty, is regarded by Britain as sound under international law.

In addition, the mutual assistance clause of the Sino-Soviet treaty only specifies aid in the event of an attack on either party by Japan or other powers allied with Japan, which hardly applies to the United States.

But these legal considerations do not altogether remove the impression that it is in Formosa, and not in Korea itself, that the principal danger of an extension of the conflict lies.

Globular Peace Offensive

Detroit, July 18.

A proposal that the United States should invest more than $1,000,000 million in a 100-year fight to rid the world of Communism, was made today by Mr. Walter Reuther, President of the United Auto Workers' Union, in a letter to President Truman.

He advocated a globular peace offensive under American leadership as a "compelling necessity" for "democratic survival."

He proposed a world-wide programme under United Nations sponsorship. He envisaged a huge international enterprise operating from a "People's World Assembly For Peace" within the United Nations.

Each nation would contribute according to its means to a fund for "economic and social construction." The "People's Assembly" would chart the course for action.

Military defence would be expanded. America's present foreign aid programme would, of course, be dwarfed. "One final purpose, however, would be total disarmament," Reuther.

Seamen Challenge Canberra

Sydney, July 18.

The Communist-dominated Seamen's Union challenged the Government to a showdown today, announcing that its members had approved the Union's recommendation not to handle arms shipments to Korea.

The announcement was considered a direct defiance of the Government's announcement that it would use all means in its power to keep shipments to Korea moving.

The Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Arthur Fadden, said the Government would proceed against anyone who tried to disrupt the Australian war effort in Korea.

External Affairs Minister Percy Spender called the Communist move an insolent challenge that will be met with all Government power.

The Secretary-General of the Union said the proposal not to handle shipments obtained a majority of "several hundred" in an open vote in all major ports.—United Press.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER

Washington, July 18.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted unanimously today to end the investigation of the charges made by the Republican Senator, Mr. Joseph McCarthy, about Communists in the American Government.

The Democrat majority of a sub-committee, in a report, branded the accusations "a fraud and a hoax."

The full committee, at what was described as one of its stormiest sessions, also voted by nine to two to send the report of the sub-committee majority to the Senate.—Reuter.

RUSSIA'S NAVAL BASES IN FAR EASTERN WATERS

London, July 18.

Russia has developed at least half a dozen naval bases in her Far Eastern waters and is building up military and industrial strength in Siberia, British informants said today.

These sources—experts on Russian affairs—said the Soviets were believed to have less than 100 submarines stationed in these bases. Use of subs, they said, is hampered by ice along the Siberian coast most of the year.

They estimated that Russia has some 35 divisions available in the region, supported by armoured and airborne units and strong air forces totalling 4,000 planes.

These sources said the best available reports on military preparations in the Soviet Far East were as follows:

Major naval bases are at Vladivostok, opposite Japan, Sovietistka, Gavan and Nikolayevsk, opposite the Soviet Island of Sakhalin, and the Dairen-Port Arthur area in Manchuria, which is still under Soviet control.

Other naval bases are at Petropavlovsk, at the southern tip of Kamchatka peninsula, and Paramushiro Jima and Porofu Jima, in the Kurile Islands, where the Soviet-Chinese centres are at Chita, where Siberia, Mongolia and Manchuria meet, and at Khabarovsk, on the Northeastern Manchurian border. The area is covered by about 20 air bases.

Reports reaching London say the development of communications in the Soviet Union has been speeded up. Moscow Radio said last week that "first class highways and roads" had been built in Outer Mongolia, the Soviet satellite bordering on Siberia. The Trans-Siberian Railway, already double-tracked, is said to be undergoing further extension.

Official Soviet sources have said production targets for industries in Asiatic and Central Russia have been raised above the levels originally set by the current five-year plan. This is part of the declared policy to shift industries away from European Russia into the fastnesses of the Urals and towards Siberia.

According to the latest estimate of the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe, increased Soviet output has come from regions remote from Eastern Europe—United Press.

Majority Of Nine

London, July 18. The Labour Government had a majority of only nine in the House of Commons tonight when the Conservatives challenged its running of the £20,000,000 East Africa groundnuts scheme.

An Opposition motion to cut money supplies to the Ministry of Food by £5—a traditional way of forcing a vote in some types of debate—was defeated by 200 votes to 290.

The Opposition were not satisfied with an announcement by the Food Minister, Mr. Maurice Webb, that the scheme was to be "realistically modified."

Plans for this were being prepared, he told the House, and were expected to be ready by late October.—Reuter.

Demand For Intelligent Censorship

New Orleans, July 18.

The New Orleans Item demanded in an editorial today "intelligent military censorship" over Korean front-line dispatches to protect the "safety of our forces."

The Item said General MacArthur's order on Saturday barring two correspondents from Korea "effectively points up the shortcoming of a policy of voluntary censorship that he lifted the ban on Sunday does not alter the situation. No American likes the idea of censorship. Yet there can be no question that it is essential to protect the safety of our forces."

"If this idea is accepted, the next step is to ensure that censorship while effective, remains intelligent."

KEY COMPLAINT
The Item said the cases of Peter Kalischer and Tom Lambert illustrated the need for good censorship. The paper said neither was disciplined for inaccurate reporting but for "giving aid and comfort to the enemy" by writing stories that made the "army look bad."

The editorial said: "This, of course, brings up the key complaint against censorship—it prevents a true situation from being presented to the public. On the other hand, it also helps to keep the enemy in the dark. Let us not forget that the Japanese abandoned their balloon bomb scheme, although technically sound, because they were unable to find out whether the bombs ever reached the United States."

The Item continued: "Perhaps Lambert and Kalischer exercised poor judgment. But they are scarcely to be blamed for publication of true reports in the absence of any system of censorship. The responsibility for deciding what is not of aid and comfort to the enemy rests with the military."

MERITS ATTENTION
The paper said the problem of censorship merits attention on the highest level—the Joint Chiefs of Staff—because if it is both effective and intelligent, it must be administered by a member of the armed forces.

"If the philosophy of censorship is solely to suppress any clerk can do the job. But if there is genuine intent to encourage the greatest flow of information in keeping with military requirements, censorship calls for superior officials—men with training and judgment to draw a line between danger and safety," the Item said.—United Press.
